Using Technology To Enable Collaboration (August 2001)

http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/ovc/publications/bulletins/ut_8_2001/187528.pdf

Following the OVC bulletin Denver Victim Services 2000 Needs Assessment, this bulletin (NCJ 187528) continues to document VS2000 initiatives by describing the VS2000 automated information system, its implementation, and suggestions for developing and maintaining technology-based solutions to serve crime victims. It discusses the technology initiative that needs assessments revealed as critical for achieving the goals of establishing a seamless, accessible system of services. This information will help victim service providers and agencies determine the best technology for enhancing interagency collaboration to support victims in the community.

PUBLICATIONS: BOOKS

Collaboration: What Makes It Work, Second Edition (New in 2nd Edition)

Paul Mattessich, Marta Murray-Close, and Barbara Monsey

A practical look at the latest collaboration research, this resource provides a working definition of collaboration; details of the 20 factors influencing successful collaborations; a chart that compares the elements of cooperation, coordination, and collaboration; and an expanded collaboration bibliography and list of contacts. This book also offers several tools such as the Wilder Collaboration Factors Inventory, which is an assessment instrument to determine how well your collaboration incorporates the 20 success factors. The three goals of the book are (1) to review and summarize existing research literature on factors influencing collaboration, (2) to report those results so that new collaborations can benefit from the experiences of others, and (3) to make available practical tools, such as the inventory, that bridge the gap between research and practice.
